Never Say Excuse Me Louder Than You Burp is an affectionate and edgy look back at the experience of growing up clueless in the Middle America of the 1950's. This collection of short pieces is rich with characters from the author's youth -- alpha males in the gym class shower, a politically incorrect Santa Claus, a dentist who eschews anesthesia but embraces conspiracy theories, a summer camp chaplain who recruits Manchurian candidates for Jesus. It is a gonzo take on a time and place in which vomiting in a grade school cafeteria is a political act and prom dresses were impenetrable fortresses of taffeta and rebar.
